Forestry Meeting

Charlottesville- The annual summer meeting of the Appalachian Section of the Society of American Foresters will be held August 26-28 at Harrisonburg, Va. Foresters from Virginia, West Virginia and North and South Carolina will convene on the afternoon of the 27th to discuss new methods of forest fire control, tree insect and disease research findings and various other forestry topics. The United States Forest Service and the Virginia Forest Service will be cohosts for the meeting.

In announcing the schedule of events, State Forester George W. Dean mentioned that the oak wilt survey findings for Virginia will come up for discussion. Dean said "two crews are now at work surveying all the forest land west of the Blue Ridge mountains, as well as the areas immediately to the east. They are using aircraft, look out towers and road patrol to spot trees infected with oak wilt."

"The laboratory analysis have not been completed on all suspect trees but it is expected that a partial report will be available in time for the meeting," said Dean.

ALFALFA SILAGE VS. ALFALFA HAY FOR WINTERING BEEF CALVES

What about alfalfa silage vs. alfalfa hay for wintering beef calves?

Reporting on research from Nebraska and Kansas, VPI animal husbandmen say those states found alfalfa hay to be distinctly superior to alfalfa silage. The dry matter of both rations were the same and a ration of 3.04 pounds of corn and 7.18 pounds of hay produced 1.62 pounds of daily gain, compared to 1.15 pounds daily for 3.04 pounds of corn and 22.12 pounds of alfalfa silage. Beef heifer calves, weighing 350 to 400 pounds were used in the test.

Nobody takes a guess at why.

Williams Reunion

The families of the late Emmette F. Williams, of Pamplin and the late Allen B. Williams, of Charlotte Co., met at Holliday Lake last Sunday for the annual "Williams Jamboree." A bountiful picnic dinner was served. The young people enjoyed bathing, fishing and boating while the others reminisced. There were ninety-two present.

After 57 years of service with the Norfolk and Western Railway Company, James D. McDearmon, agent at Appomattox, has retired, as of August 10.

Mr. McDearmon's memories of his long years of railroad service reflect varied emotions as he recalls his many interesting experiences, happy ones intermingled with near tragedy and amusing incidents.

During Mr. McDearmon's over half century of service, he has served in many capacities and at numerous stations along the main line of the N. & W. On a torrid night in August, 1896, his first assignment was that of night operator at Pamplin. His hours were from 7:00 P. M. until 7:00 A. M. at a salary of $40.00 per month. This scale of pay proved to be ample at that time as the youthful operator paid only $10.00 monthly for room and board.

His first regular job was at Rice, where he worked three months and later did extra work at Waverly, Tucker, Halsey, James River Siding and other places.

In September, 1897, Mr. McDeamon became agent at Evergreen where he remained until 1917, when he was assigned to Pamplin as an operator in the tower and at intervals worked as relief agent. He was made agent at Pamplin in 1925, and served in that capacity until 1951, when he succeeded his brother, Clarence S. McDearmon who was retired as agent at Appomattox.

Mr. McDearmon gives credit for his training as an operator and agent to his brother, Clarence S. McDearmon, and the late Richard F. Burke and John A. Sears.

When asked to recall some of his railroad experiences, Mr. McDearmon, with a grim expression and in a modest manner, told of avoiding a wreck at Evergreen in April, 1898 when an engineer failed to regard a signal. With a red lantern, the Evergreen agent flagged an east bound passenger train and a west bound freight as they neared a head-on collision. The trains came to a dead stop when the respective engineers applied hand brakes when there was only a distance of one foot between the trains. There were no personal injuries. The passenger train was delayed only 10 minutes. This was in the single track days.

Our subject, with a gleam in his eyes, and a chuckle, told of one of the most memorable nights he recalls spending. His version is that "A crazy man spent the night in the station while I was on duty. We were alone. All night long, and believe me it was a long one, he watched me and I watched him. Each time I moved, he moved. surmised that he had a delusion that something was after him and be-

Annual Report Of Leaf Group

A total of 51.14 per cent of the state's 1953 dark fired tobacco crop was marketed through the Virginia Dark Fired Tobacco Growers Marketing Association, Inc., according to the organization's annual report.

This information was in the annual message of Association President Chas. T. Moses, of Appomattox covering operations for 1953-54, and presented at the year-end meeting last week at the Farmville headquarters office. The association operates on a fiscal year from July to July.

Despite 1953's drought- stricken crop, the Association marketed 5,270,291 pounds of dark leaf tobacco for growers, at an average price of $35.09 per hundred.

The report also indicated that only seven per cent of the tobacco on all warehouse floors throughout the Virginia Type 21 belt went into the cooperative pool operated by the Association. The remainder was bought by commercial interests.

President Moses reported that the Association's assets at present are $220,000, "which is the property of you farmers who have patronized the Cooperative down through the years since it was organized in 1932."

The assets consist of two fully-owned warehouses, one in Lynchburg and one in Farmville, and a storage warehouse in Blackstone. The Association also rents three additional warehouses.

Town Plans Another Well

Town Manager C. J. Hunter stated this week that the Town of Appomattox is pushing plans to have an additional well dug, to bolster the local water supply. A tentative site has been chosen on the northeast side of town, and conferences have been held with state authorities whose approval must be obtained. A final decision on digging the extra well is expected in a few days. At present, the town has two wells and two water tanks to provide its water supply. Due to extended dry conditions, and the vastly increased use of water here as the town continues to grow, the problem of securing more water presented itself. It is believed that a third well, with the water from it being pumped through the existing tanks, would solve the local water problem, at least for several years.

To Publish A History of N&W

A well-documented history of the Norfolk and Western Railway will be published on August 25 by the New York University Press.

Titled "From Mine to Market: The History of Coal Transportation on the Norfolk and Western Railway," the 380-page book was written by Joseph T. Lambie, an economist who, working on a fellowship from the Social Science Research Council, spent almost a year in research in Norfolk and Western offices. He completed it during the six years he was an assistant professor of economics at Wellesley College.

In "From Mine to Market," Dr. Lambie tells how the N & W established itself as a vital regional coal carrier, then traces its expansion and discusses its relation with rival and affiliated roads. The closing chapter is concerned with the future effects of the newer sources of energy, including atomic, on the coal-producing and coal-carrying industries.

After a brief history of the N & W's predecessor roads, Lambie begins his detailed study with the first car of coal delivered from the Pocahontas field on May 17, 1883 and consigned to the mayor of Norfolk, "a hero of the late Confederacy who happened to be, conveniently, a leading coal merchant." Then it describes the phenomenal growth of the industry, tells of its triumphs, setbacks and major problems through the last 71 years.

"From Mine to Market" is illustrated with photographs and charts and is comprehensively indexed. It is the third volume in the Business History Series published by the New York University Press.
